Concept Note

The theme “History Beyond Conventional: Heterodoxies, Women, Children and Crime” is intended to bring forth the hitherto unrepresented lives of women and children in India. The lived experiences of this section had been in oblivion due to myriad reasons. Women and children can be victims in most times irrespective of time and space. In fact they may be vulnerable to certain politico-social -cultural situations. It is important to recognise the unique circumstances under which they have destined to live and to address the problems of their lived experiences. Women and children have historically been marginalised and oppressed group and studying their experience can shed light on the systematic inequalities they face. This knowledge can inform social justice mechanisms with a view to create more equitable and inclusive societies. Thus the seminar theme is significant for promoting social justice and achieving deserving representation for them to empower.
